John Ripley Internship

Steven Letourneau was selected to receive the Ripley internship in FY 2015. In that capacity Letourneau worked in the Kansas Historical Society's Museum and Education Division conducting research for upcoming exhibits, developing interactives for the upcoming special exhibit, What's Cooking, Uncle Sam?, and assisting with planning and implementing public programs, including West Fest and the Sundown Film Festival. He supervised the summer youth volunteers and gave tours at the Kansas State Capitol. His duties also included assisting with the reorganization of education storage areas.

Letourneau received a bachelor's degree in history from Kansas State University in May 2015. He is continuing his studies at K-State pursuing a bachelor's degree in secondary education with a minor in leadership studies, with the goal to become a high school social studies teacher.

The Ripley internship honors the Topekan who was known for his prosperous laundry business, and also for his deep interest and knowledge of local history. The internship funds a full-time position for eight weeks each summer and is available to students who are majoring in history, anthropology, communications, marketing, graphic design, American studies, museum studies, folk arts, or a related program. It is open to students enrolled at Washburn University, those who have graduated from a high school in Shawnee County, or those who are residents of Shawnee County.
